Peggy had never before seen the inside of a play house. She entered at the time Othello was making his defence before the duke and senators; the audience were unusually attentive to the play, and Peggy was permitted to walk in the lobby, until she arrived at the door of the stage box, when a gentleman handed her in without taking his eyes from the celebrated performer, and her beau, a country boy, was obliged to remain in the lobby. Miss Peggy stared about her for a moment, as if doubting whether she was in her proper place, until casting her eyes on the stage, she observed several chairs unoccupied. It is probable this circumstance alone would have induced her to take the step she did-but she observed the people on the stage appeared more at their ease than those among whom she was standing, and withal much more sociable-and as fate would have it, just at the moment, Othello looked nearly towards the place where
